

Annual Report for Fiscal Year 2008

Annual Report of the Georgia Historical Society for Fiscal Year 2008

INTRODUCTION

W. TODD GROCE
President and Chief Executive Officer

During the past year, the business of history continued to flourish, and so too did the Georgia Historical Society. The year ending June 30, 2008, was a landmark for our institution as we completed several significant projects that created unprecedented access to our archival and library collections and public programs. In the process we brought history to the citizens of Georgia through new and innovative avenues, influenced the teaching and interpretation of our state's and nation's past, and achieved a new level of statewide representation and presence.

Financially it was once again a particularly good year for GHS. We ended FY 2007 in the black, and as of the last audit net assets were approximately $7.4 million, an increase of 10 percent over the same period last year. The endowment fund continues to grow and at the end of the fiscal year stood at almost $6.8 million, also an increase of 10 percent over the same time last year. With the completion of a pledged gift of $125,000, a new endowment fund was created in memory of A. W. Jones, Jr., by Bill Jones III of Sea Island; and $25,000 named funds were also established for the Solomons family by Philip Solomons, Sr., of Savannah and for Margaret and Langdon Flowers by Peggy and Scott Rich of Thomasville. This brings the number of named endowment funds to thirty-one. By supporting the endowment campaign, these donors from across the state have demonstrated their deep commitment to this institution and its mission, and we thank them for their farsighted generosity.

As we built for the future we also worked hard to enhance the present. GHS received nearly $1 million this past year in both new and ongoing grants. These funds came from private, corporate, and government sources, including $116,000 from the National Endowment for the Humanities Landmarks of American History program to train community college faculty, a $133,000 appropriation from the Georgia Department of Economic Development to develop the first phase of a Civil War historical marker interactive driving tour, a $75,000 grant from the National Historical Publications and Records Commission to process backlogged archival collections, and a $65,000 gift from the DuBose Family Foundation of Atlanta to process the Ossabaw Island Collection. In addition, the 275th Birthday Bash and Awards Gala, the first event of this type for GHS, raised nearly $400,000 for educational programming, library and archives services, and publications. Another $250,000 was donated in annual giving and membership for the same purposes, $100,000 of which was committed by our Board of Curators.

The ultimate goal of this fund raising, of course, is to collect, preserve, and share the story of Georgia and its role in American history. One of the most significant ways GHS does that is through historical markers, and we achieved a major milestone this past year when we approved our 150th marker since assuming operation of the program from the State a decade ago. These markers represent the breadth and diversity of our state's past, reflecting the concerted effort by GHS to tell the entire story of Georgia's history. Battles, leaders, churches, and cemeteries still receive plenty of attention, but we have made room for topics and people previously ignored in historical markers. For instance, approximately 30 percent of GHS markers deal with topics of African-American history, 14 percent focus on women's history, 5 percent cover Native-American history, and over half (51 percent) examine historical subjects in the twentieth century. Those erected this past March in Savannah about Georgia's largest slave sale and in Marietta on the site of the 1915 Leo Frank lynching are among the most prominent examples of how all of Georgia's history is being included.

GHS installed twelve historical markers across the state in FY 2008, including this one in March in Cobb County about the Leo Frank lynching. Pictured left to right are Bill Nigut of the Anti-Defamation League, former Gov. Roy Barnes, GHS President and CEO Dr. W. Todd Groce, and Jerry Klinger of the Jewish American Society for Historic Preservation.

And the inclusivity is also geographic. Our Historical Marker Review committee last year approved for installation twelve new markers from all across the state on wide-ranging topics such as Gov. William Atkinson in west Georgia's Meriwether County, Mossy Creek and Rock Springs Church campgrounds in north Georgia's White County, and Robert Forsyth, the first federal marshal killed in the line of duty (1794), in east Georgia's Richmond County. Indeed, GHS markers are present in 40 percent of Georgia's counties, up from 36 percent in the previous year. Although perennially under-funded by the State, the historical marker program is growing and is increasingly important to education and tourism.

In fact the GHS historical marker program will play a key role in Georgia's commemoration of the upcoming national sesquicentennial of the Civil War. As a way of making our state a tourist destination, the Georgia Department of Economic Development has contracted with GHS to develop a plan for creating a series of interactive driving trails based on Civil War historical markers. A comprehensive survey of all 1000+ of these existing markers began in June that will provide a base line for the project. Using the latest in GPS and computer technology, GHS will note and document the location, condition, text, and accessibility of these markers. This data will enable us to determine what markers need to be repaired and to identify significant gaps in the Civil War story. Eventually the existing markers, almost all of which are about battles, will be supplemented with new ones covering topics currently underrepresented: the homefront, the experience of women and African Americans, Unionism, politics, industry/war production, and non-combat military topics such as supply, desertion, and civilian-army relations.

In addition to our 150th historical marker, during FY 2008 GHS paused to recognize another milestone when we celebrated the 275th anniversary of the founding of Georgia in February with a highly successful (and fun) Birthday Bash and Awards Gala. Over 500 people from across the state descended on Savannah's Hyatt Regency at the site where James Oglethorpe landed in 1733. They enjoyed a festive evening that featured a toast to Her Majesty the Queen, greetings from the British Consul General, the presentation of the Society's two most prestigious awards—the John Macpherson Berrien Award for Lifetime Achievement and the Sarah Nichols Pinckney Volunteer of the Year Award to GHS supporters Bradley Hale and Archie Davis, respectively—and an entertaining look at great moments of leadership and courage presented by NBC Presidential Historian Michael Beschloss. With honorary chairmen such as Governor Perdue, U. S. Senators Chambliss and Isakson, Congressmen Barrow and Kingston, the Georgia Secretary of State, Attorney General, and Labor Commissioner, the event was a fitting way to recognize this momentous anniversary in the history of our state.

The gala was the climax of the 2008 Georgia Days, chaired by GHS Board member Jenny Lynn Bradley. Our signature two-week educational event has become the premier school history program in the state. Appropriately on the 275th anniversary of Georgia's founding, the honored historical figure was James Edward Oglethorpe, ably (and convincingly) portrayed by professional historical interpreter Scott Hodges of Darien, Georgia. A curriculum guide for classroom instruction on Oglethorpe's life and eighteenth-century Georgia was developed for teachers and made available on our web site. Over 25,000 students along with 10,000 adults participated in eleven programs during a two-week period, ranging from a series of school events, a colonial crafts workshop, the two-day Colonial Faire and Muster living-history program held at Wormsloe State Historic Site, and the colorful Georgia Day parade. By engaging students in interactive learning experiences, Georgia Days sparks the imagination, develops critical thinking processes, and opens the exciting world of the past to exploration, study, and understanding.

NBC Presidential Historian Michael Beschloss delivered the keynote address at the 275th Birthday Bash and Awards Gala in February.

Thousands of costumed schoolchildren marched in the GHS's Georgia Days parade on February 12, marking the 275th anniversary of the founding of Georgia.

As we celebrated our state's founding with these elaborate programs and ceremonies, we worked just as vigorously to provide access to the primary sources that form the foundation for scholarly research. Our library and archives continued to preserve the record of our past and to reach out to those around the globe who seek to gain a deeper understanding by exploring these documents, photographs, and artifacts. Nearly 5,500 patrons were served, nearly fifty new collections were processed and made accessible to the public, and over 1,000 additional manuscript collections and 750 books were catalogued and made available for research.

The number of researchers that utilized our collections this past year only partially reflects the impact that the archival collections of the GHS had on the interpretation of Georgia and American history through the printed word. Dozens of new books from both university and commercial presses, and countless articles in journals and magazines, were published last year based on research conducted in primary and secondary sources held by GHS. New research tools such as the Online Public Access Catalog (OPAC) and our newly designed web site will only increase access to the collection and thus accelerate and enhance the ways in which GHS will shape future scholarship.

Increasingly more scholars are studying the events of the past fifty years, and their ongoing research is a reminder of why it is crucial for GHS to continue to add current records and those of the twentieth century to our archival and library collections. All future scholarship will be based on these primary sources, so their acquisition is essential to our understanding of the recent past—and the continued relevancy of GHS. Frankly, we have not been as diligent as we should about collecting documents from the post-World War II era, and we cannot afford to allow this significant gap in our collection to widen. If we do we will find ourselves lacking the necessary tools to tell Georgia's entire and constantly unfolding story. Accordingly, in 2008 we began aggressively pursuing the papers of a number of prominent late twentieth-century Georgians from the fields of politics, business, education, law, journalism, and literature.

While taking steps to expand in those subjects and time periods that are underrepresented we also focused on bolstering areas of existing strength. For instance, among the nearly fifty new collections we acquired this past year are the extensive drawings of prominent Savannah architect John Lebey, further enhancing the most significant collection of architectural materials related to the country's largest historic district. The history of Georgia's African and Native Americans continued to expand with the addition of the minutes of the antebellum St. Catherine's Island First African Baptist Church, federal government documents concerning the slave ship Antelope, and four new manuscript collections that document the Indian conflicts of the early nineteenth century in Lee, Floyd, Walker, and Dekalb counties, including an 1824 letter related to the Chehaw Expedition in southwestern Georgia in 1818 and an 1831 letter reporting on Indian massacres in the northwestern corner of our state. The nearly 100,000 photographs, 1,000 maps, and over fifty portraits at GHS were supplemented by an image of Confederate Gen. E. Porter Alexander and his siblings, maps of the 1950 Clark Hill Dam project, and nineteenth-century oil paintings of politicians William Schley and Edward C. Anderson. And our collection of antebellum political history, one of the great pillars of our archives, continued to grow with the acquisition of correspondence from Gov. Howell Cobb and published writings concerning the slavery crisis of the 1850s by U.S.

But if these materials are to be useful they must be accessible. For that reason one of the most significant of all our FY 2008 accomplishments is the completion of the Institute for Museum and Library Services cataloging project we began two years ago. As a result our entire collection of processed manuscripts, books, and pamphlets can now be discovered through our new OPAC. This has opened the GHS collections to the world and made history more accessible to a larger number of people than ever before. A condition of the $150,000 federal IMLS grant was that GHS raise $170,000 in matching funds, and I am pleased to report that we met this requirement by the deadline of July 2008.

This massive cataloging project was directly tied to the launch of our newly redesigned web site. One of the major achievements of the past year, indeed of the past decade, this content-rich and user-friendly site and its accompanying OPAC has created unprecedented access to Georgia's history. Users are invited to engage in Georgia's story through new online exhibits, a history education resource center for school children and teachers, an interactive historical marker tour, online articles and publications, a calendar of events, and advanced research tools. All of these features are to be found in this handsomely designed site and I encourage you, if you have not done so already, to visit and spend some time exploring what we have to offer at www.georgiahistory.com.

While we were immersed in creating new technology, GHS also continued its strong commitment to traditional forms of public programming. We offered five public lectures, including "An Evening with Gen. James Oglethorpe," presented by Oglethorpe impersonator, re-enactor, and historian Scott Hodges, whose acting skills and encyclopedic knowledge of the general and his times made Georgia's founder come to life for the audience. There were four additional lectures based on newly published books: Equiano: The African by Vincent Carretta; The Genetic Strand: A Family History through DNA by Edward Ball; Reading the Man: A Portrait of Robert E. Lee through His Private Letters by Elizabeth Brown Pryor (which later won the 2008 Lincoln Prize); and Diehard Rebels: The Confederate Culture of In- vincibility by Jason Phillips. In addition, the 2007 Profiles in Leadership program held in the Georgia Public Broadcasting studios in Atlanta featured a fascinating conversation with preeminent presidential historian Robert Dallek on the subject of presidential leadership in post-World War II America.

Author Elizabeth Brown Pryor spoke in November 2007 about her Lincoln Prize-winning biography of Robert E. Lee, Reading the Man, which was based in part on the large cache of Lee letters at GHS.

Teacher training has become a cornerstone of our education program, allowing us to improve the level of classroom instruction around the state and thereby to reach thousands of school children. With our partners at the Savannah Chatham County Public School System (particularly at the Massie Heritage Center) we continued to implement our overlapping third, fourth, and fifth $1 million federal Teaching American History grants. This partnership brought a series of nationally recognized scholars from colleges and universities across the country to make ten presentations to Georgia teachers on figures such as Alexander Hamilton, William T. Sherman, and Thurgood Marshall, and topics such as the Lewis and Clark expedition, the Gold Rush, and the Battle of Little Big Horn. Almost 100 teachers participated in these engaging and challenging sessions that will continue into next year.

Just as they did when GHS published its first book in 1840, our publications continue to inform and challenge those who seek a better understanding of our state's and nation's past. FY 2008 marked the 91st year of our award-winning Georgia Historical Quarterly, which under the skilled editorship of Professor Anne Bailey at Georgia College and State University continued to present the finest in cutting-edge research and to influence the interpretation of Georgia's history. One can hardly pick up a book on any aspect of our state's history published during the past nine decades and not find the bibliography filled with references to articles from the Quarterly. This past year we offered our readers an opportunity to examine such wide-ranging topics as Scottish merchants and the shaping of colonial Georgia, the Chicopee Mill Village in Gainesville, and the Johnston-Hood controversy at Cassville during the 1864 Atlanta Campaign, which reportedly created a furious debate among the members of the Atlanta Civil War Roundtable! Our new popular history magazine, Georgia History Today, continued to receive rave reviews, largely because of the fascinating articles submitted by Ed Jackson of the University of Georgia's Carl Vinson Institute. Ed drew on his vast knowledge and collection of photographs to treat us to stories about the centennial of flight in Georgia, monuments across the state recognizing Georgia founder James Oglethorpe, and efforts through the years to remember President Franklin Roosevelt's connection to our state.

As we preserved and interpreted Georgia and American history, we also recognized those who have committed themselves to helping us fulfill our mission, either by directly supporting this institution or by telling the story of Georgia's past through exhibits, publishing, or media projects. Because these groups and individuals are from all over the state, we began the practice of making the award presentations in their communities, where the ceremony will be more meaningful. A full list of the awards is included at the end of this report, and we commend all of the winners on their outstanding contribution to preserving and teaching their local and state history.

The Georgia Historical Society is indebted to our many partners whose untiring efforts and generosity helped us to accomplish so much, especially the Massie Heritage Center in Savannah, the Georgia Humanities Council, and Georgia Public Broadcasting. GPB has not only worked with us on Profiles in Leadership and the 275th Birthday Bash, but they invited GHS Senior Historian Stan Deaton to host a 30-minute monthly radio segment of the program Cover to Cover. When the first of these, an interview with John Ferling, acclaimed historian of the Revolution, aired on Sunday, May 18 at 8 P.M., GHS found a new way to fulfill its mission with an ever-widening audience. Our other partners—Georgia College and State University, the Office of Secretary of State, and the Georgia Department of Economic Development—provided crucial funding for the Georgia Historical Quarterly, our library and archives, and our historical marker program, respectively, and we thank them for their invaluable financial assistance.

It would have been impossible to fulfill our mission without the determination and generosity of our Board of Curators. Under the intrepid leadership of Don Kole, who in 2008 completed a highly successful two-year term as chairman, the board once again provided invaluable guidance, financial support, and assistance in everything from planning to fund raising. The board's enthusiasm and engagement reflected that of its chairman. Don Kole has been involved in GHS for nearly twenty years, serving in various capacities, including a long stint as treasurer, board vice chairman, and chair of the search committee that recruited a young thirty-two-year-old executive to take over the helm at GHS thirteen years ago. No one has given more to our institution than Don, and we owe him a deep debt of gratitude. He was succeeded in the spring by Bill Jones III of Sea Island who was elected to the chairmanship at the Annual Meeting on April 17. With this incoming classs, our board has achieved its greatest geographic diversity in its 169-year existence. Three of our four board officers are from cities other than Savannah; and ten of the eighteen board members (55 percent) now reside outside the limits of Chatham County, all reflecting the fact that this is truly a Georgia Historical Society.

The other group that continues to make GHS a winning team is our devoted, hard-working, and energetic staff. Recruited from all over the country—California, New England, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Tennessee, Washington, D.C.—these extraordinarily talented young professionals merit the highest compliments and expression of gratitude this institution can offer. Especially deserving of recognition is the senior management team of Executive Vice President and Chief Operating Officer Laura García-Culler; Vice President for Programs and Scholarship (and now Senior Historian) Dr. Stan Deaton; and Library and Archives Director Nora Lewis. I continue to admire their dedication to this institution and their ambition to excel at whatever we lay our hands to. Without a doubt they, along with our board, made 2008 a remarkable year.

Now we look to the future. With the election of a new board chairman and officers, GHS is about to begin a new chapter. The board at its spring meeting approved the largest operating budget in the institution's history—$2 million, which is a long way from the $165,000 operating budget just prior to our voluntary privatization by the State thirteen years ago. There is no greater evidence of the wisdom of that course than the explosive growth reflected in this increase in our programs, research services, and publications.

And most exciting of all, we are about to take the first steps toward celebrating our institution's 175th anniversary. During the last days of the fiscal year board chairman Bill Jones constituted a new strategic planning committee, chaired by board member and Atlantan Phil Jacobs, that has been charged with the vital process of laying plans for what the Georgia Historical Society will look like and what we will be doing as we celebrate nearly two centuries of service to the people of Georgia. By the time we reach our 175th birthday in 2014, GHS will have expanded physically in a way that will parallel the expansion we have achieved in our programming, services, and membership.

During the past dozen years or so, our effort to create a state-wide organization has meant that our focus has been outward. The time has come, however, for us to look inward, to begin to address the physical space and infrastructure needs that our rapid and vast outward expansion has created. We need to build both a physical plant and an endowment that can sustain this institution into the twenty-first century. Remarkably since the construction of our main building, Hodgson Hall, in 1876, there has been only one expansion. In 1970 the Abrahams Annex was constructed to provide a state-of-the-art climate-controlled environment for the storage of our archival and rare book collections. Beyond that, there has been no additional space built or acquired by GHS during the past 132 years.

But the time is fast approaching when we can no longer avoid taking action. Today our most pressing needs are for administrative office space for our growing team and room to house and properly care for our rapidly expanding archival collections. The day is not too far away when our future growth—and our ability to preserve and teach Georgia's history—will come to a dramatic halt because of inadequate facilities built to meet the needs of 1876 rather than 2008. We have the momentum; all we need is a plan for tackling these challenges.

In closing, let me once again express the appreciation of the Georgia Historical Society to all those who during the past year took time out of busy schedules or donated precious resources to assist us in the fulfillment of our mission. Cultural institutions are only as good as the people who support them, and GHS has grown into one of the best. Because of our many donors, supporters, volunteers, and partners we go forward with confidence, certain that we will realize our dream of creating a better future by studying the past.
